Chapter 1 by GuitarHiro

There once was a robot named Millie. She lived on her own in a huge city on a planet called Metra Etira.

The city, Rbot-107 was actually a robot city. It housed the robot workers of the FTL Drive component factories and was filled with robots of various shapes and sizes.

Millie was an average sized robot. She was originally designed to be a companion robot for the elderly. Unfortunately a bug in her AI caused her to develop a personality of her own rather than the stock personality provided to her.

As she grew increasingly more independent of her original purpose her owners decided she was too much of a liability. A robot with it's own personality was dangerous, it could choose to harm people, it could refuse to follow orders. She was sent off to Rbot-107.

Millie lived there, a sentient robot among the rejects. She hoped one day to leave Rbot-107 and see what wonders of nature had to offer.

One day, shortly after acquiring sentience, she had noticed a portrait of the Erus Mountain range and had become distracted. The city peaks covered with glistening snow and stern, not green trees all framed by a soft blue sky.

Millie knew she had to go there. She wanted to escape the order and melancholy of Rbot-107 and venture beyond the grey skyscrapers and smokestacks that was her home.

Then one day she found her opportunity.
